What is It

Parenthood is the act of being a parent. It also means being a father or mother of the biological child. When adoption is involved, the parents are the legal father and mother of the kid.

Responsible parenthood is the will and ability to respond to the necessities and ambitions of the family.

Responsible parenting is the series of decisions that couples make to warrant the best promising life for the family and for the community to which the family belongs. It is the ability of the parents to nurture children in the Filipino way and to satisfy the social, economic, and religious responsibilities of a family. Parenting also embraces the inculcation of values and encouraging discipline.

Parenthood is a boundless responsibility or task. It is not a role that can be effectively achieved based on chance. It is a status where responsible couples decide and make a decision to have a family.

There are several points when thinking of parenthood:

Happiness and stability of the marriage.

The relationship of the couple should be satisfactory because a child's arrival may only become another source of marital stress and misery.

Physical and emotional readiness of both partners for parenthood.

A wife should be physically and emotionally prepared to give birth to a healthy child and the husband should be mature enough to carry out his responsibilities.

Financial stability.

The cost of living gets higher as the newborn child completes the family and it is dependent on the parents.

What do we mean by responsible parenthood?

An important part of growing up is learning to make decisions about our lives. Part of decision-making means taking responsibility for our own actions and understanding that our decisions affect the lives of other people. To make responsible decisions, a person needs accurate and reliable information. Decisions about family size and child spacing should be made by the mother and father for both of them will be affected at the end of the day.

The situation of every person and each couple is different. Therefore, there is no set of rules or guidelines which can be applied to everyone. Couples need to make their own decisions regarding responsible behavior. However, discussions within the youth group and advice and counseling within the youth from adults will help youth to make good decisions.

Establishing a family is a very important decision that demands emotional, intellectual, social, physical, and economic preparation. Motherhood and fatherhood are not a simple task in which we are "naturally equipped"; they require preparation and maturity.

Responsible parenthood includes the process of deciding how to choose our partners, when to form families, when to have the first child, child spacing, how many children to have, etc. But responsible parenthood does not end with decisions about how many children to have and when to have them. Responsible parenthood includes all the decisions we take to ensure the best possible lives for ourselves and to our children.

Children have special needs that oftentimes neglected if not carefully planned for. Beyond their need for appropriate nutrition, children also need emotional support and affection, mental stimulation, social involvement, and recreation.
