Evidence to Support a General Statement

Directions: Read the paragraph below then answer the questions that follow.

Schools should encourage collaboration than individual activities. It is easier to work with others than to work on your own because you get more things done if more heads and hands work together for a common goal. Collaboration saves time. Also, working with others encourages deeper learning. With more heads working together, students do not only learn from their teacher but from their groupmates as well. With collaborative learning, students can freely share their ideas in a more comfortable setup which can help them boost their confidence, self-esteem, and even communication skills. It reduces the anxiety from the students as it lessens the burden of carrying the weight of doing a task alone.
